Wonderland Vienna 2006

Since 2004 Wonderland has been touring Europe, with venues for the architecture show in a total of nine European countries. At each venue 11 local teams of mostly young architects were added to present their own work along with the exponents already on tour. However now the show is drawing to a close; it is being presented at what is to be its last fixture in September, in St. Veit an der Glan, Austria, where the project has started in 2002. The work of 99 European teams will be on show. One can gain insight in the young European scene, new approaches, and a wide-range of commissions that can no longer be categorised according to the classical image of an architect.

The idea

The idea for Wonderland was born in 2002 in Carinthia, when spado architects were asked by the company Funder whether they would like to exhibit their work. "We could never have filled the hall with our two or three projects," the two recount, "so each of us brought in five other groups of architects. The only stipulation was that at least one member of each team was Carinthian."

The eleven groups dubbed the exhibition 'Wonderland', developed a uniform system of presentation and showed their work over the course of a year in Graz and then in Vienna.

After its success in Austria two of the eleven Austrian teams – noncon:form und SHARE architects – developed the idea to continue this project throughout Europe.

From each of the other eight countries (Slovakia, Czech Republic, Germany, Netherlands, France, Italy, Croatia and Slovenia) eleven teams of the younger generation of architects have been invited to consecutively join the exhibition community.

The team selection

First there were two or three contact-teams in each of the participating countries. Local resident offices served as a basis for the growing network. Those teams independently chose a modus to select the other teams from their country that should join the WONDERLAND tour.

The only precondition was that the selected teams should be exponents of the young architecture somehow representative for their country.

The contact- teams also organized the exhibitions on site by themselves. The WONDERLAND-club, though, which was founded by the eleven Austrian teams for coordination purposes in 2004, supported the local contact-teams in questions of communication, organized all the logistics and acted as a supervisor.

The exhibition system

The Wonderland presentation system consists of 440 LP-sized panels, called 'Pixels'. The more exhibitors there are as the tour progresses, the less surface each has at their disposal. In St.Veit/Glan each team will only have four Pixels at their disposal which means they have to concentrate on the essentials of their work. Which pixels were to be shown in each country had to be fixed by each team when entering the tour by a "Pixel-on-tour-plan".

Ever since Vienna the exhibition concept of presenting the team exponents on the so-called Pixels has been changed. The pixels have been moulded into a floor-lamp – called „Pixel-Light“ – with the teams' works printed onto the lampshade. Each Pixel-light stands for one teams. The lamps can be purchased at www.wonderland.cx.

The conditions for young architecture in today's Europe

In a special way WONDERLAND reflects the conditions under which young architecture is developing nowadays. One quite palpable aspect is that the young generation of architects is tending to work in teams. This is because the demands are permanently growing and for almost every project specialized skills, knowledge and experiences are required. So to withstand the economic pressure flexibility is of the up most necessity and as a consequence many young teams work interdisciplinarily.

80% of the WONDERLAND participating architects are organized in such teams.

WONDERLAND – a network for architects by architects

But WONDERLAND is far more than just the sum of the exhibited works and objects. WONDERLAND has a goal. It aims to support the network between the young generation of architects in Europe. This aspect of the WONDERLAND project is even funded by the European Commission. The launching pad for this growing network are the 99 teams from the nine European countries.

Serving those linking purposes are workshops, lectures and open dialogues alongside the tour that will continue after the project has ended.

WONDERLAND – a new architectural magazine

A first quite visible module of the network has been realised already by bringing into life the WONDERLAND magazine which is a print medium about the architect's profession; the issue is 'how' and not 'what'.

Its first issue of the magazine, which is published in cooperation with the A10 magazine, is available since May 2006, the next one will follow in January 2007. Therefore WONDERLAND invites young teams to participate - www.wonderland.cx/magazine

publication: Wonderland travelogue: 9 fragments of an architectural tour

This specially designed catalogue is available since June 2006 and consists of the poster-leporellos that have been produced for each of the WONDERLAND tour stations. By this the catalogue will not only provide a vivid overview of the tour but also reflects the development of it during the journey and the building of the WONDERLAND network.
